About this meeting

Generating Roadmaps for Research in Museums is an online gathering designed as a collaborative space for PhD students working on heritage-, museum-, and collection-related topics. Rather than a traditional academic conference, this meeting emphasizes peer-to-peer networking, building new connections, and exchanging ideas in a supportive environment.

A select group of professors will be there to provide guidance, but the core of this meeting is about learning from each other, clarifying research directions, and developing meaningful discussions.

Through short presentations, interactive discussions, and small-group exchanges, this event aims to help participants navigate the complexities of museum research, develop their research angles, and gain new perspectives. We hope to create an engaging and comfortable space where PhD students can share insights, offer constructive feedback, and explore potential collaborations.

This event is part of the Museum University Forum (MUF), an emerging initiative within the CIVIS Alliance that brings together universities and museums to foster research and teaching collaborations. Our discussions will also contribute to shaping the future direction of MUF, exploring its potential as a platform for interdisciplinary exchange.
