Analysis and discussion materials (videos, texts, podcasts, MOOCs) and guidelines will be provided to facilitate group interactions, cohesion and debates during the sessions. Most of these materials will be produced by the teachers themselves. Online learning experiences will include varying degrees of interactions throughout the CIVIS-Moodle platform. The academic team will use the most innovative pedagogies in the asynchronous and synchronous parts to facilitate the acquisition of competencies and skills.

In the last week of the online format, we will distribute the students in groups and the themes to elaborate the case studies that will be exposed and discussed in the face-to-face part of the course (3-8 July 2023). Students will work independently on online lessons, projects, and assignments at home (workload). Academics will review their learning progress, discuss their work, and provide tutorials.
